

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

If there is any subject in the common school whose teaching has been a disappointment to teachers themselves, that subject is spelling. In spite of new and improved methods of teaching spelling, in spite of more time spent upon spelling, and in spite of efforts to reform English spelling, students throughout the eight grades of our public schools continue to disappoint us in their spelling. Then, too, the high school graduate seems as likely as ever to mar his thesis by frequent misspelling; the letters of business men are far from satisfactory in spelling; and, finally, the college graduate continues to show us that he is by no means a master of spelling. This is a formidable array of evidence against our teaching of spelling, and from every quarter comes the cry, "What is the matter with our spelling teaching?"

The answer to this question may come from either or both of two sources; namely, (1) our spelling material, or word lists, may be at fault, and (2) our methods of teaching these lists may be bad. But when we note the different methods that have been used in teaching spelling in the last few years, and apparently with no great difference in ultimate success, it would seem that it is time for us to investigate our spelling material. Are the spelling lists which we are giving our students good or bad? Are these lists made up of words which children actually use, grade for grade, in their own free written speech? Or are they full of words which are as far beyond these children as our reading and arithmetic materials once were? It is this significant question that prompted the author of this book to conduct an eight years' research in the field of spelling material. Since this spelling book is based on the results of that *research, a brief description of the same is here given.

"Research."

One thousand fifty (1050) grade students, approximately one hundred fifty (150) students per grade above the first, were asked to write daily themes on topics of interest to children. This theme writing was continued, with widely varying topics, and all words carefully listed as they came in, until each student's writing vocabulary was approximately exhausted. The number of themes per student ranged from 56 to 105, the students in the higher grades usually requiring both more and longer themes in order to drain their word wells. The total number of themes examined was a little over 75,000, and the themes averaged a little less than 190 words. The total number of words recorded from all themes, counting each word as many times as it appeared, was approximately 15,000,000.

*A bulletin setting forth this research in full detail may be obtained for 10c by addressing the Secretary of the Faculty, State University, Vermillion, South Dakota.

These word lists reveal the following facts of extreme importance in the teaching of spelling:

1. While there were 15,000,000 words used by the 1050 students in writing 75,000 themes of about 190 words each, only 4500 different words in all were used.
2. Nearly all of these words were repeated many times, and practically all of them were misspelled by some one or more students.
3. The total number of different words in the writing vocabularies, grade by grade, and the average number per student, are as follows:

Grade	Total number of different words used in the grade	Average number per student
2	1927	521
3	2396	908
4	2838	1235
5	3270	1489
6	3695	1710
7	4114	1926
8	4532	2135

4. No student misspelled as many as 100 different words, and the average number misspelled was forty-eight (48).

The forty-five hundred different words used, grade by grade, are found arranged in the graded spelling lessons that follow. There were 524 of the second grade words which were used by fifty (50) per cent of all the second grade children, 655 additional words were used by forty (40) per cent of the third grade, 754 more by thirty (30) per cent of the fourth grade, 769 more by twenty (20) per cent of the fifth grade, 750 more by ten (10) per cent of the sixth grade, 578 more by six (6) per cent of the seventh grade, and 502 more by two (2) per cent of the eighth grade. (No word was recorded unless used by at least two per cent (3 out of 150) of the students of some grade. It is the foregoing distribution of words (524 for the second grade, 665 for the third grade, etc.) that is used in this spelling book.

The most astonishing thing about these grade lists is the fact that over 1900 of the forty-five hundred words were used by the second grade children. When, however, we note that the second grade students averaged only 521 different words, it becomes at once evident that it is not desirable (neither is it possible) to teach second grade students to spell all of these words.

If now any teacher would like to discover some of the vital weaknesses of our spelling teaching, let her compare these lists of words which children actually use in their own free written speech with the lists given in our most popular spelling books. A few of the facts to be noted in this comparison are as follows:

1. Spelling books commonly contain 15,000 words; that is, more than three times as many words as are used by 1050 grade students together.
2. Since by far the greater number of words commonly found in spelling books is not found in the writing vocabularies of children, we have been liberally wasting time in our school by having children study thousands of words which they do not use, while we are not succeeding in teaching them to spell the 4500 words which they do use.
3. Many of the words which children commonly misspell are not found in the popular spelling books.
4. In studying the usual spelling book no child knows the words which he uses from the thousands which he does not use; and since he spends most of his time on the unfamiliar words, his study is not well directed and economic, to say the least.

THE JONES SPELLING BOOK

SUGGESTIONS ON THE TEACHING OF THE SPELLING LISTS FOUND IN THIS BOOK.

The dominant aim of the spelling lesson.

The primary aim in the spelling exercise today is not testing, but teaching; not finding spelling errors, but preventing them. We are no longer to teach children "desk made" lists of words which even few adults ever use, or which we guess they will use; but we should teach them to spell the words, grade by grade, which they actually use. We are therefore to center our efforts on the prevention of misspelling of useful words. We have so few words to teach now that the teacher may wonder what she is to do with the spelling period, hence a few suggestions on methods of teaching spelling are here in place.

Factors of spelling teaching.

There are three factors to be taken into consideration in teaching the child to spell any word: namely, (1) the meaning, (2) the pronunciation, and (3) the spelling. Tests which have been made show that it is never safe to take any one of these three factors for granted. If a child does not know the meaning of a word, then he cannot use it and he has no need of spelling it. If he mispronounces it, he is likely to misspell it. It thus appears that both meaning and pronunciation enter into the spelling task.

Handling the spelling lesson.

There are very few words in the following lessons whose meaning and pronunciation are not familiar to most of the students in the grade to which they are assigned. There are some words there with which some children are not familiar. Then, too, an isolated word may have no meaning, or it may have many meanings. The teacher therefore should not assign any lesson for study until she has gone over the list of words with the class and has had the children use the words orally in sentences, so as to fix the meaning and pronunciation. The child may then attack the spelling task safely, and the teacher may test him during the following class period to see if he can use the words, correctly spelled, in expressing his own thoughts in writing. It is conceded that some work in oral spelling may be well in place, but it is not conceded that oral spelling should be the main spelling test. Experiments show that students are often able to spell words correctly, especially orally, when the attention is centered on the spelling of the isolated words, and yet the same words may be freely misspelled when the attention is on the thought to be embodied in the sentence. Whether the student is an optile (eye-minded) or an audile (ear-minded) or a motile (motor-minded) or any of the other ideational types, the ultimate spelling test is his ability to write the word in expressing his own thought. This, then must be made the final test.

The teacher of spelling will then need the usual fifteen or twenty minute class period (1) for testing the ability to spell the words (assigned the previous lesson) in free written speech, (2) for making sure of the meaning and the pronunciation of the words to be assigned for the following lesson, and (3) for dealing with any special difficulties that may arise in learning to spell any word. The old twenty-words-a-day lesson is to disappear, for the two reasons that (1) we no longer have words enough to last a year if given in such overdoses, and (2) we cannot handle so many words in efficient spelling teaching.

Teaching Homonyms.

It should be further noted that troublesome homonyms (deer, dear; waste, waist) do not usually appear in the child's writing vocabulary at the same time. Often they appear years apart. Experiments in teaching homonyms have been made by the department of education in the University of South Dakota, which show that homonyms should not be brought together until the second one of the pair appears in the child's vocabulary. This often gives time to fix the meaning and the spelling of the first member of the pair before the second one appears. In such cases the homonyms give relatively little trouble. If the homonyms do appear together in any grade vocabulary, then they must be taught together, and this may best be done by using the words freely in sentences, thus fixing the spelling along with the meaning.

Individual misspelled lists.

However careful a teacher may be in teaching spelling, she will find students misspelling words here and there in their written work. Such words present a very definite task, and spaces for private lists of all misspelled words are prepared at the end of each year's work in this book. In these spaces the student should carefully record (correctly spelled) each and every word which he misspells during the year. Two classes of errors will be found in these lists, namely, cognitive errors (errors in knowing) and motor errors (errors in doing). Such mistakes as the writing of "you" for "your," and "the" for "that," are motor errors. The student thinks one word and then trusts to his motor habits to write it, and a more familiar habit slips in. Such errors are to be noted carefully and merely watched for in writing, whereas cognitive errors are to be corrected by learning to spell the words. Cognitive errors are more common in the lower grades, and motor errors in the upper grades.

The reading lesson not a spelling lesson.

A suggestion on the rather common practice of teaching the child to spell all words of the reading lesson may be well in place. Any literate individual is master of many words through his eyes and ears, which he never uses in his own free written speech. The writing vocabulary is the last vocabulary which a child starts to learn, and it lags behind the eye and ear vocabularies, perhaps for years. Compare the words of a reader in any grade with the spelling vocabulary of that grade and it is soon discovered that it is futile to try to teach the child to spell all the words of his reading lesson.

DICTATION.

In the day of the 15,000 word spelling book, dictation by the teacher was a clear necessity in order to handle the thousands of words unfamiliar to the students. When a child is forced to spell such words as epicure, coiffure, lassitude, fraternize, infatuate, irascible, equanimity, and so on, one can easily see the need for dictation either by the teacher or by the spelling book in order to give at least some intimation of the use of words not only beyond childhood but beyond anything like the language of sociable adults. But with spelling lists of words familiar to children, grade by grade, we need no dictation for such artificial purposes. The dominant purpose of the modern spelling lesson is to teach the child to spell, grade by grade, the words which he is about to use in his own free written speech.

While it may be conceded that we know the lists of words which children commonly use, it is far from assured that we know how they use them. In an investigation of the methods of teaching spelling recently carried on in the University of S. Dakota it was found that when the teacher assumes to know the sense in which any given child uses words (this the teacher must assume in her own dictation exercises), she is making a dangerous assumption. Note the following Experiment in Dictation.

A skilled fourth grade teacher was asked to choose one of her best known pupils and then see how well she could predict the pupil's use of words by writing three sentences using three given words in the sense in which she thought the pupil would use them. The given words were belt

rocks

The teacher chose a boy whom she had known "all his life", and who had been in her own classes for nearly a year. This boy was a farm child, and incidentally he wore a new gray suit with a belt on the blouse. After thinking over the child's experience carefully the teacher wrote the following sentences indicating the sense in which she thought he would use the three words.

1. My new suit has a belt.
2. Papa separated the cattle from the horses.

3. I stood on the rocks and fished.

The boy, who was unaware of what the teacher had written, was then called and asked to write three sentences according to directions. His three sentences follow :

1. John ran into me and I gave him a belt.
2. Papa separated the cream before I got up this morning.
3. Mama rocks in her new chair.

The boy was then shown the teacher's sentences and asked to tell what each meant to him. To the teacher's astonishment the boy could not get the teacher's meaning in a single instance. In spite of the fact that his new gray suit had a belt the boy was surprised to learn that his teacher called it a "belt," for he knew it only as a "band." When he read the second sentence he asked the teacher if the "man put the cattle and horses in a separator," and he actually knew no other meaning for the word "separated." The third sentence meant nothing to the boy for there were no rocks along his fishing stream on the prairie; yet when the teacher explained that a rock is a "big stone" the boy remembered that he had seen big stones in the Black Hills and had heard them called rocks.

Let any teacher try this experiment for herself with a group of child words and she will soon discover what has been going on in our spelling work under the name of dictation. The fact is, dictation by the teacher is very likely to be misleading to the child, for the reason that his limited experience with words may have missed the meaning most familiar to the teacher. Indeed we seem to need to learn for spelling what we have already learned for arithmetic, reading, and other subjects; namely, the child is not a little adult, and the only safe plan is to keep within the child's own experience.

In The Jones Spelling Book we have attempted to offer to the child his own word lists, grade by grade; and the teacher should teach him to spell these words in expressing his own thought. In other words, the child should do his own dictation. Give the child a few of these familiar words and ask him to use them in sentences and the teacher will readily find (1) that children actually use these words freely, and (2) that they have their own uses for them.

ILLUSTRATIVE LESSON

For Fifth Grade

The teacher writes five words on the board ; say cane clear oven

pod
claws

She then says, "I will give you a sentence, using the first word, 'cane'; and she writes on the board,

"Grandpa walks with a cane".

Then she says, "I can use the word 'clear' in a sentence; and she writes,

"The water is clear".

She now gives the students a chance to try giving sentences; and she asks, "Who can give me a sentence, using the third word, 'oven' " ?

A student responds with the sentence,

"Mama bakes bread in the oven".

The process is continued for the remaining words.

The aim of the foregoing procedure is to fix (1) meaning, and (2) pronunciation; and when these are assured the teacher turns to the oral spelling of the five words, calling special attention to the difficult words, "clear" and "claws". After a few trials on oral spelling, the five words are assigned as a lesson to be studied for the next day.

At the beginning of the lesson on the following day the class is tested on the ability to spell the words correctly in written sentences of their own dictation. Very few moments are needed for the testing; and then the words for the next lesson are taken up as before.

The following, then, is the plan of procedure in teaching spelling: (1) fix the meaning and pronunciation by student dictation of sentences, making any necessary corrections before assigning the lesson for study; and (2) test the spelling ability at the next lesson by having the student write sentences of his own dictation containing the words.

FIFTH YEAR

The teacher should not assume to begin these lessons until she has carefully read the "Suggestions on the Teaching of Spelling", pages 6 to 11.

The sentences given in the lessons that follow are merely illustrative student sentences, and they are in no case intended to take the place of the student's own dictation as shown in the illustrative lesson on pages 12-13-14.
